GRACES @ NUH

Gynaecologic Robot-Assisted
Cancer & Endoscopic Surgery

A member of NUHS

Women who need gynaecologic surgery now have an option that results in less pain and minimal scarring. This new treatment option gets women back on their feet faster while being just as effective as traditional surgical treatments...

GRACES @ NUH (Gynaecologic Robot-Assisted Cancer and Endoscopic Surgery at the National University Hospital) is a care concept that brings together sub-specialty gynaecologic surgeons, nurse clinicians and allied health professionals to accomplish one and only one goal, to help women who need gynaecologic surgery return swiftly and smoothly to living life fully.

Where healing begins in the very best hands

We realise that making the decision to have gynaecologic surgery is not an easy one. It is often a diagnosis of cancer, endometriosis or other non-cancer related conditions that result in women living life less fully either because of pain or debilitating symptoms. The decision to have surgery is further compounded by the prospect of a long, difficult recovery after operative treatment. Little wonder then that women often feel conflicted about having gynaecologic surgery; on the one hand a condition that impairs quality of life and therefore requires treatment, and on the other the prospect of a long difficult recovery.

We believe that women deserve the very best gynaecologic surgical care without the handicap of a protracted postoperative recovery. We believe that women deserve to get surgical treatment that removes disease, and that women also deserve to have this treatment and still expect to be back to the business of living their lives without interruption.

We can make this commitment to our patients through the use of innovative surgical technology in the form of the daVinci® surgical system. In the hands of our team of highly-skilled sub-specialty gynaecologic surgeons, complex gynaecologic surgery for conditions such as endometrial and cervical cancer, severe endometriosis, uterine fibroids and pelvic organ prolapse can be accomplished without the scarring and pain associated with traditional surgical approaches. Consequently, our patients never have to compromise on either treatment success or outcome as they seamlessly transition surgery to life as normal.
