Piecing the A-D-M-E Jigsaw of Pharmacokinetics in Special Populations

Passive content learning and active problem/case/team-based learning – is there something in between? This presentation shares on the use of jigsaw collaborative learning in the content teaching of clinical pharmacokinetics in special populations to Pharmacy undergraduates. We will compare the effectiveness of and student perception towards this method in comparison with didactic lectures. The strength and limitations of this method will also be discussed.

Dr CHNG Hui Ting

Department of Pharmacy, National University of Singapore

Dr Chng is a Lecturer with the Department of Pharmacy, NUS. In class, she is a proponent of active and collaborative learning. Outside class, she is actively engaged in the mentoring of student co-curricular activities which she believes provide students with a holistic university education. Her educational goal is the empowerment of her students.

AIM (Advanced Internal Medicine) – ED (Emergency Department) Combined Educational Round Based on Case Based Learning

At ED we have prospective presentation of the patient and it is difficult to do follow up until patient discharge in busy schedule. AIM-ED combined round provides an opportunity to look at the patient from admission to discharge. Objective of this clinical teaching forum is to discuss, share learning and teaching tool for juniors for patient centred education. We select an interesting or unusual case and look at our standard practice by reviewing evidence, international guidelines or protocols and its acceptance in local practice.
