

NUS-Priority Research In Medical Education

Coaching as an Educator: Identifying the Coachable Moments With Your Students

As a university of applied learning, we believe in going beyond the traditional instructional approach where educators offer students direct answers. Beyond timetabled hours, there exist many opportunities to engage students through coaching to develop good learning habits and accountability, for example during feedback sessions, group projects, research assignments and placements. In this sharing, I will share about the faculty development program we have and how we engage students holistically by finding coachable moments to have effective coaching conversations.

A/Prof May LIM

Centre for Learning Environment and Assessment Development (CoLEAD), Health and Social Sciences
Singapore Institute of Technology, Singapore

Dr May Lim is an Associate Professor at the Singapore Institute of Technology (SIT), an occupational therapist by profession. May oversees Centre for Learning Environment and Assessment Development (CoLEAD) that looks after the faculty development programmes in learning and teaching at the university level. She won the university Teaching Excellence Award in 2016, 2018 and 2020. She actively looks for coachable moments to coach students for holistic development.

Extending Supervision of Speech Therapists in the Workplace: The Impact on the Supervisory Relationship

There is a perceived impact on the supervisory relationship when a new graduate (preceptee) requires extended workplace supervision due to unsatisfactory performance. Such a phenomenon is increasingly prevalent in the Singaporean Speech Therapy community. Limited research is available about how these graduates feel, as well as extending supervision in the context of an employer-employee relationship compared to that of a teacher-student relationship. This presentation provides a framework of how preceptors and preceptees negotiate such events in the workplace, and provides insight into how we can best prepare new graduates as they enter the workforce.

Mr LAM Jun Yan Calvin

Rehabilitation, National University Hospital, Singapore

Calvin is a Speech Therapist working across both inpatient acute and outpatient settings. He currently co-leads the adult workgroup as well as lead education efforts in the section. He holds a Master in Speech Language Pathology from University of Sydney and recently graduated with a Master of Science in Health Professions Education with University of Maastricht, in collaboration with Academy of Medicine Singapore.

Date : 9 May 2022 (Monday)
Time : 12.30pm - 1.30pm Singapore Time (30mins each)

Registration closes on 6 May 2022

Register at: <https://tinyurl.com/56bnsbp6>
or scan the QR code

This session will be conducted online

Each Speaker:

20mins pre-recorded presentation +
10mins 'Live' Q&A

NUSMedCenMED