National University Hospital

Faculty Profile

With close to a decade of experience in the healthcare industry, Mushan is currently Head of Operations for the Department of Orthopaedic Surgery, and the Department of Hand & Reconstructive Microsurgery.

In addition, he heads the hospital's Operations Centre, a position he has held since 2018. In this position, Mushan leads a team to provide oversight and coordination for emergency preparedness and crisis management across the hospital. Working closely with the hospital leadership team and various external agencies, he was key in spearheading both immediate responses and long-term recovery strategies during the COVID-19 pandemic. For his exceptional contributions, Mushan was awarded the prestigious Public Administration Medal (Bronze) (COVID-19) in 2023.

Before joining healthcare, Mushan had served in the Singapore Armed Forces for 14 years. During those years, he honed his skills in leadership, strategic planning, and business continuity management. His military career included a deployment for peace support operations and humanitarian missions in Afghanistan, a testament of his ability to lead under pressure.

Mushan holds a Master of Business Administration (MBA) from the National University of Singapore. He has an Executive Certification in Leadership & People Management from the Singapore Management University.
